The news business in Boston and across Massachusetts is going through a wrenching period of change. News organizations are shrinking. Coverage is narrowing. In depth reporting on public policy and civic life is in danger of disappearing. CommonWealth Magazine is bucking those trends. We provide extensive and in-depth coverage of Massachusetts politics and public policy – complete with analysis to help make sense of it all.

Every week day, thousands of business leaders, local politicians and engaged citizens use CommonWealth Magazine to inform themselves of the state's most important issues and stories. Among these frequent readers are:

- Key elected and appointed officials.
- Major newspaper and magazine editors, reporters and columnists
- CEOs of the state's leading corporations
- Heads of nonprofit, civic and philanthropic organizations
- Emerging leaders across the Bay State

CommonWealth Magazine relies on foundation grants, corporate sponsors, and the support of individual donors who see the value in unbiased reporting on issues that are receiving less and less attention from the mainstream corporate media.
